State Highway Department Was Not Satisfied Either

Sometimes a man gets an exhalted opinion of himself and when he does, it generally results in his undoing. This seems particularly and most forcibly true in the case of A. N. Budd of Rostraver township, who claims to be a road builder. Mr. Budd had charge of the construction of the state road from the Sheetz farm to West Newton and the traveling public has been greatly annoyed by the methods in force.

Last winter people were required to travel over the foundation of the road with the top dressing laying along in the trenches. It was anything but satisfactory. This summer a mile or so of the road was kept open with the foundation work in and the top dressing along side of the road or somewhere else. Newspapers spared the foreman all of this time until a few days ago when automobile men decided that the matter should be called to public attention, and Mr. Budd criticized. The Independent spoke of the tardy way the road was progressing, and that it was a mistake to put in so much of the foundation without the covering. Mr. Budd evidenty couldn't stand the criticism. He wasn't broad enough to take it in the manner it was given and he rushed into print with the following in the Monessen News:

To the Editor of the Monessen News:

In reply to an item in the West Newton Times-Sun last week (copied from the Monessen Independent) referring to the construction, or rather the builder of the Belle Vernon-West Newton road, I wish to say that if we are favored with a few more days of good weather, Editors Harry Pore and J. Q. Waters may take a spin over the finished road. I am sure they will then say we have something worth while, that the road is built right Time will prove it.

The business of Mr. Pore and of Mr. Waters is editing a newspaper, mine is building roads. Perhaps we are better in our own separate lines.

A. N. Budd.

In this week's issue of the West Newton Times Sun, we find the following which will more fully explain:

"General Foreman of Roads A. N. Budd, in charge of state highway work in Rostraver township, is off the job. Deputy Commissioner of Highways Biles, after inspecting the work in course of construction on route 118 yesterday, asked Foreman Budd for his resignation. Mr. Budd promptly replied, "You have it, Mr. Biles." In speaking of his resignation this morning, Mr. Budd said that troubles arose over his refusal to work on Sundays. He attributes his lack of speed on the job, which has been progressing all summer, to the want of adequate machinery. The Department of Highways, it is alleged, claim that the work was dragging and that better time should have been made."

It is evident that Mr. Budd's own estimation of himself and his road building is satisfactory to himself if not to the people and the Highway Department, but when a man gets too good an opinion of himself it is called "exaggerated ego." Mr. Budd evidently has the ego. But as he says our business is editing a newspaper, while his is making roads. We are still in our sanctum, but Mr. Budd, where is he?

Arrest Agent

Probably for the first time in the history of Charleroi, a slight stomach ache this week spoiled completely a neat outside advertising scheme that has caught churches in Monessen, Monongahela and Donora.

The scheme is one arranged, it is said, by a Cincinnatti house. This house agrees to supply churches with a certain number of hymn books of almost any kind, Excell, Rodehaver or such according to desire, providing the house is permitted to sell advertising space arranged on pages in the front and back. But in Charleroi the salesman or solicitor became afflicted with a stomach ache. He took something for it, and that something went to his head. The police thought he was drunk and arrested him. He gave his name as Ed. Smeltz. Burgess Woodward fined him.

Already Smeltz had signed up advertising contracts in Charleroi and arranged to give away some of his firm's hymn books, but the contracts were returned on the ground that his contribution of music stock would not be entirely acceptable. In his pocket he had contracts for some of his books. Also he carried recommendations and explanations from ministers in Monongahela, Donora and Monessen.

Mother Of Local Man Died Thursday

Mrs. Emma Hileman, wife of Samuel Hileman of near Brownsville, died on Thursday, Sept. 23 at the age of sixty-eight years. Her death occured in a sudden manner. She dropped dead while walking near her home. While her health had been very poor a short time ago, she had recently been very much improved and her death came as a great shock to friends and relatives. The deceased was in every way a Christian woman and was devoted to her family and friends. Besides her husband, she is survived by three sons and one daughter, Ewing Hileman of Monessen, Robert Hileman of Belle Vernon, George Hileman of Brownsville, and Miss Nora, at home.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon at two o'clock and will be in charge of Rev. Geo. Wilson, pastor of the Little Redstone Presbyterian church. Interment in Brownsville cemetery.

Still a Republican

To My Fellow Townsmen:—

I take this opportunity of sincerely thanking you for the loyal manner in which you have endorsed my candidacy for the office of Register of Wills to which I so ardently aspired. It is most pleasing to note that after a constantly hard uphill fight for county recognition, one is allowed the heart to heart welcome that you all have so graciously accorded me.

I started out early in the campaign with the determination of being able to return a credit to my home constituency by allowing no deviation either by speech or action to isolate me from the companionship of the fellow members of our county's arena, which of course I assure you has been most closely adhered to.

I was Monessen's candidate on the Republican ticket and I still remain Monessen's Republican citizen, following the banner that has so successfully lead others to victory and will allow no defeat nor personal animosity to alter my determined course in assisting our county to maintain its Republican majority. I beg to remain, Monessen's mill man,

Jesse J. B. Wall.

Auto Wrecked

Rev. J. B. Swain, pastor of the Christian church was past thirty minutes late at the Sunday school convention at Scottdale, but he had a good excuse. While driving his Ford car out the brick road just as the party was leaving town, the machine was feeling rather frisky and decided to cut up a bit, and getting too near the embankment, car, occupants and all were precipitated down over the hill about fifteen feet. So complete was the somersault that the bottom of the car was on top and the top was on the bottom. The four wheels were sticking straight up in the air with the occupants under the car. The little old Ford rambled right along. the engine kept going and the wheels were spinning when Rev. Swain crawled out from his perilous position to find that no one was even slightly injured.

A hurry up call was sent to town and the car was assisted on its pedals, and while the top and windshield had to be discarded, the party moved on to Scottdale. Rev. Swain claims it helps a Ford to do better work to shake it up a bit.

Big Sun Flower

Eugene Downey, the six year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Downey of 30 Knox avenue, brought a monster sun flower to the office this afternoon. The flower measures 13 inches across and is by far the largest ever grown in this city. Eugene found the seed among some chicken feed which was brought to the house and planted it. He watched over his flower carefully and was rewarded with the champion product.

SCHOOL CHILDREN ARE TO PASS DIRECTLY FROM HOME TO SCHOOL

On account of danger from automobiles and the damage done to lawns and trees by children congregating in crowds on the streets on their way to school, it is necessary for them to go directly from their homes to the school building.

Parents should see that their children do not start from home so as to get to school before 8:30 in the morning and 1:10 at noon, and should also, for the sake of their safety, urge them to walk on the sidewalk and go directly to school.

Please see that this regulation is observed.

Conucil Preparing To Wage Fight With Water Company

At a special meeting of the borough council Thursday evening, all members were present with the exception of Dale and Bumer. Numerous ordinances for sewers in various parts of the town were brought before the members for the first time, and many other matters of interest wer given consideration.

The Light and Water committee gave their report and were instructed to continue to secure data for the taking over of the Tri-Cities Water company. Council also agreed to secure the services of a consulting engineer to assist them in their work and will have a prominent attorney of Pittsburgh to represent them. Committees have attended meetings and hearings against water companies at Greensburg and Tarentum and have secured valuable data for the local fight.

The Burgess was instructed to have signs placed one square away from all school houses, notifying autoists that the speed limit was 6 miles. An ordinance will also be drafted to compel the street car company to pay their part of the street cleaning and to put dimmers and fenders on all cars. The ordinance will also regulate jitney traffic within the borough limits.

A motor cycle policeman will be secured to assist in arresting violators of the traffic ordinance.

Election Muddle

A serious dispute arising over a serious error made in the formation of the Republican ballot for school director in the First ward, in Mount Pleasant, will pass into the courts. An application was made to the court on Friday morning for a hearing in the case, and a request made that the court order a recount of the votes of that ward. In framing the ticket in the commissioner's office previous to the primary election, all of the candidates for school director were placed under the head of council for four years—Vote for One. The space marked "Council, 2 years—Vote for one" was left blank. Many of the voters voted for two candidates under the four year heading, and others wrote names in the blank space under the two-year heading. When the officers of the election counted the votes, the names placed in the two year space were not counted.

To Know This Country

"Know America" is a slogan that should ring from every school room, office, farm and shop in this nation. No man can aspire to a higher honor than to become a capable citizen, and no one can merit so distinguished a title until he is well informed of the resources, possibilities and achievements of our country.

This is a commercial age, and civilization is bearing its most golden fruit in America. We are noted for our industrial achievements as Egypt was noted for her pyramids, Jerusalem for her religion, Greece for her art, Phoenicia for her fleets, Chaldea for her astronomy and Rome for her laws. Likewise we have men who will go down in the world's history as powerful products of their age. For standing at the source of every gigantic movement that sways civilization is a great man. The greatest minds travel in the greatest direction, and the commercial geniuses of this age would have been the sculptors, poets, philosophers, architects and artists of earlier civilizations.

As Michaelangelo took a rock and with a chisel hewed it into the image of an angel that ever beckons mankind upward and onward, Hill took the desert of the northwest and with bands of steel made it blossom like a rose, dotted the valley with happy homes and built cities in waste places.

As Gutenberg took blocks of wood and whittled them into an alphabet and made a printing press that flashed education across the continent like a ray of light upon a new born world, McCormick took a bar of iron and bent it into a reaper and with one sweep of his magic mind broke the shackles that enslaved labor of generations yet unborn and gave mankind freedom from drudgery and lifted the human race into a higher zone of life.

As Nelson organized the English navy and made England mistress of the sea, enabling the British isles to plant her flag upon every continent washed by the ocean's waves and to make footstools of the islands of every water, Morgan organized a banking system that has made America master of the world's finances, brought kings to our cashier's windows, the nations of the earth to our discount desks and placed under the industries of this nation a financial system as solid as the rock of Gibraltar.

There is no study quite so interesting as progress, no sound so magic as the roar of industry and no sight so inspiring as civilization in action. A full realization of America's part in the great events of the world, past, present and future, will thrill every human heart with pride, patriotism and faith in Republican institutions.

Reputation Is Everything

Recently the mother of a boy who is about twelve years of age, made complaint before a Judge that her son was unruly and she feared he was associating with company that in the end would bring disgrace to him and her. The Judge told the son to step near him and in pleasant tone of voice, said, pointing to the parent, "Boy, there is the only true friend you have; obey her. Let me impress this on your mind; think of it, remember it! Whatever shadow you cast in life will follow you as long as you live and always keep up to you. That is your reputation. It is always in sight and just your size exactly, and how proud and happy it will make your fond mother if you will stop going with bad youths and stand in such a position in the sunlight of heaven that your shadow will always be on the side of honesty and respectability. Go home this time with your mother, turn over a new leaf and prevent the law from sending you to reform school."

Golden words. No more pertinent truth was ever more aptly spoken; no wiser counsel ever offered by mortal lips. Your reputation in your community is your shadow. It is exactly your size, and you can never get away from it; though you may flee a thousand miles of a cloudy day, the moment you show yourself in public, your shadow is at your side. Your habits and modes of thought have left their imprint upon your features, unconsciously controlling your speech and action, and dissemble as much as you may, are constantly signalling from behind the mask that you are not what you pretend to be.

How to Treat a Fracture.

Be very careful with a single fracture to prevent it from becoming compound. The proper treatment is to pad and bandage the limb with splints and anything else which can be improvised, so as to hold it steadily in position until your injured man can be carried comfortably to the camp or nearest doctor. Don't get jolting him or handling him with anything but the greatest tenderness. If there are no chances of getting a doctor, cut all the clothing away from the injured limb, and when you have it bare get some one else to help you, if you can. Pull straight on the end of the injured limb farthest away from the body, and as gently and firmly as possible manipulate the broken bone into position. You will know when this is done by the shape of the limb.—Outing.

Business Advertising In 1748.

Judging from many advertisements in the early New York newspapers, the numbers of buildings were very little used. Business houses were usually designated by a characteristic sign or by the locality to other well known residents. An example of the latter is seen in the following from the New York Gazette of December, 1748. Smith's Fly was at the foot of Maiden Lane.

"Henry Hansen, who lately kept his store next Door to Mr. John Groesbeeck's, is now removed to Capt. Richard Langdon's, in Smith's Fly opposite to Col. De Peyster's, Treasurer, where he now keeps his Store. He has likewise imported in the last Ships from London, a fresh Assortment of European Goods."

Mother's Constancy.

There is an enduring tenderness in the love of a mother for a son that transcends all other affections of the heart. It is neither to be chilled by selfishness nor daunted by danger nor weakened by worthlessness nor stifled by ingratitude. She will sacrifice every comfort to his convenience; she will surrender every pleasure to his enjoyment; she will glory in his fame and exult in his prosperity, and if misfortune overtakes him he will be the dearer to her through his misfortunes, and if disgrace settles upon his name she will still love and cherish him in spite of his disgrace, and if all the rest of the world casts him off she will be all the world to him.—New York Weekly.

Can there be any stronger proof offered than the evidence of Monessen residents? After you have read the following, quietly answer the question.

Mrs. . Koerner, 119 Knox avenue, Monesen, says: "I had a bad fall which injured my back. I suffered from constant pains across my loins and in the morning I was always worse. If I stooped over, a sharp pain caught me and I couldn't straighten. The secretions from my kidneys were unnatural and caused me annoyance. I didn't rest well and rheumatic pains made it hard for me to get about. I was often so lame that I had to sit on cushions and I had puffy sacks beneath my eyes. I doctored and tried different medicines, but got no relief. Two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the irsch Drug Co. drove most of the trouble away. I take this medicine off and on as a kidney tonic and it keeps me in good health."

The Broken Coin

A Story of Mystery and Adventure

By EMERSON HOUGH

From the Scenario by Grace Cunard

(Copyright, 1915, By Wright A. Patterson)

Novelized From the Motion Picture Drama of the Same Name. Produced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

"The charge is murder, as you know," said the sergeant. "The same on which you were just in charge. I am to warn you once more that what you say may be used against you at the trial.

"At the trial?" exclaimed Roleau. "I thought that was all dismissed. Did we not have the king's excuse to leave? The king himself set free my master and my mistress."

"Both your employers?" grinned the sergeant.

"I am servant of both, and certainly if either went free then so should I. Is that not true?"

"It is far from true," returned the gendarme grimly; you will see how far. Murder was committed yonder by someone, as you know. You saw it—said that you saw it. The law does not set such witnesses free."

"The king sets free whom he pleases in this land," rejoined Roleau. "I shall tell my mistress of this."

"Do so," laughed the gendarme, "a rich jest enough. But first find your mistress."

Roleau found this a proposition difficult of present answer. Others of the police closing in upon him, he went with them now peaceably as he might, to the tribunal where someone must answer for the recent crime.

The prefect greeted him grimly enough, yet with a certain exultation in his mien. It was necessary in that country, as in others, that a victim should be found for the law. Perhaps in that country more than in many others, it mattered little who that victim might be.

"So we have you again, Messer Roleau?"

"And why, may I ask your honor?" rejoined Roleau, innocently. "I was away, true, on business in other lands—business connected with my country's welfare. Having concluded that matter I returned fast as I might, and here I am."

"I Warn You—the Other Half of This Coin or Your Heads!"

"Criminals always come back to the scenes of their murder," asserted the prefect pompously.

"Is that true? I did not know it. As for me, I have done no crime. I was simply looking after my mistress' affairs in her room—her excellency, the young American, who is so high in the king's good will."

"That is all very well, very well, but it is not enough, as you will see," rejoined the prefect. "The king did not set you free."

"Only because the king had not yet heard from my mistress. Give me leave to bring the two together—and that may be done— and she will set all right at once. Ask her."

"I do not need to ask her. The king has set for me the task of finding yonder murderer. I must fill that task. I have done so now."

"What—myself—I am suspected of that crime! Your honor, that is impossible. There has been no proof of any crime."

"Send to the king," he added, catching a glimpse of uncertainty on the face of the prefect. "Send to my mistress. I claim that right under the law."

"I send to the king?" demanded the prefect blustering. "Why should I? I can control the process of the law without troubling royalty with details of that sort."

"But suppose there are consequences. These are ticklish times, believe me, your excellency. I have seen blood deeds done today. When a king goes to war—and our king may go before long—the life of an officer left behind is worth no more to him than that of a good fighting man takes with him to the front. Perhaps as between your honor and myself—"

The official took counsel with his own caution for a moment.

"I will myself go to the palace," said he at length. "To be sure, we cannot be too careful in the attaining of the ends of justice. If I cannot gain access to the king, I shall at least have made the attempt. If I can have an audience, I shall put something of this case before him myself. We wish not to meddle too intimately in affairs of which we do not know. But if the king disavows you—"

CHAPTER XLV.

The Chamber of Horrors.

Arrived presently in the royal palace and in the company not only of Count Frederick, but of yet other noblemen and officials, King Michael relaxed his martial front under the warming influence of the wine on which he so much relied.

"They fled," he exclaimed again and again, boastingly, as he referred to the scenes which but now he had left. "They fled before us like sheep, my dear count. With myself to lead the army—and you at my side—what chance would they have? They knew they had none, and took counsel of their wisdom for once. If they remain in that counsel, surely they will stay behind their own walls, and not give offense to our country. We would annihilate them. A half hour more, and we would have plundered their city today. Their treasure would have been ours!"

"What treasure, your majesty?" inquired Count Frederick coldly. "Would we go to war for that?"

"For what else?" smiled the king.

"For liberty, justice, freedom, your majesty."

"Tut! tut! where do you get those terms? A monk speaks! But listen, did we not march to your rescue?"

"Yes, your majesty, I am not unmindful and not unthankful. But still we lack the clue which alone can make war possible or desirable—the clue which alone has back of it motives worthy of a king and of a people."

"Well, well, what does all this mean then?" rejoined Michael, irritated. "Where do we arrive? What is it that you ask?"

"I can ask no questions and answer none, until we have found once more the young American, your majesty."

King Michael smiled in self-satisfaction at last.

"Ah, well, that is easy," said he. "I have said that she is, or should be, here in this palace. It is true she brought me the news of your plight."

Count Frederick waited for no change in the royal will, but bowed himself from the room. Inquiry found for him presently the waiting woman in whose care Kitty had been placed, and together they approached the room where she had been left, some hours before, to her own devices.

They knocked, knocked again, and yet again—but got no answer. The woman at length opened the door with her own key. Her sudden exclamation convinced Count Frederick that the room was empty.

"She is up to her tricks," exclaimed he to himself. "Now I wonder—"

He did not pause to ask much of the waiting woman, but hurried away down the hall, intent on certain plans of his own.

He must find her, must see her at once. He had no real idea as to which course Kitty had taken after leaving the room, but alone after a time, he walked more slowly, he could not say why. Something came to his senses, as first not recognized—a faint scent—a perfume which it seemed to him he had known before—the perfume of violets, faint, indefinite, fragrant.

He found himself at length in a narrow hallway from which there were no side passages. It led him deeper back into the palace, its trend continually downward. Thus finally he found himself in the self-same subterranean tunnel which Kitty earlier had discovered.

"She was searching for the torture chamber!" said he to himself, with sudden conviction. "That is why she came here!"

He came at length to the great door which closed the passageway. Yes, in the dust before him were footprints, and in the dust on the door itself were finger prints! The silence and secrecy of ages had been broken within the hour.

He pushed open the door—pushed it until it met some obstruction—something which lay vaguely white upon the floor. He turned downward the flare of his light—started back from what he saw.

She lay at his feet, unconscious, helpless—dead, for all he could tell. He bent over her, doubt, terror in his eyes, and reached out his hand.

She stirred under his touch. Her eyes opened, looked into his. What she saw bending over her was the face of her enemy.

"Who is it?" she cried. "Loose me—leave me! Where am I?"

She caught her hands to her face now as there came to her once more the terror of what she had seen. She dared not look about her. "Take me away!" she moaned. "Take me away!"

He made no answer for a time.

"Why have you followed me here?" she demanded at last, half hysterically.

He spoke now, slowly, almost solemnly.

"Why?" said he. "I do not know why. I think it must have been because you were in trouble. Perhaps you called me—perhaps that is why I came."

"What do you mean? Would you taunt me now, at such a time? I have been frightened almost to the point of death—it was terrible."

"Come," said Count Frederick, and placed about her an arm on whose strength, in spite of herself, she was glad to lean.

He was guiding her toward the door. She turned and saw again that which but now had smitten her with terror. Her nerves, weakened by the long strain upon them, gave way once more.

The flare of the candle lighted up the cavernous interior at whose entrance they stood. Count Frederick saw what she had seen.

On the walls stood out hooks, steel arms which supported eyeless, grinning skulls—old—how old no one could tell. Beyond arose rods and gratings, barbed, pointed, curved. An iron chair was in a corner, and in it sat a grinning skeleton.

It was the torture chamber, the room of terrors, born of other years more savage than these, and brought down unchanged through all the centuries!

"Come," said Count Frederick, his own voice agitated. "It is no time to think of any treasure now, but you—yourself!"

He caught her away swiftly into the other passage, and flung the door shut behind them. In silence he led her along the subterranean passage and up the stairs.

He left her once more alone in her own room, to compose herself as best she might, while he went on to rejoin the king.

"So, then, you found her, faithful messenger?" demanded Michael.

"Yes, your majesty, at length. She was but strolling about to pass the time during your absence. While I know little of such matters, it seems to me that the trials of the day have been extreme for her."

King Michael ended by asking the attendance of the young woman herself; but it was just at this juncture that there arrived at the palace none less than the prefect of police, who made suppliance through several court official for admittance to audience with royalty.

"He says," ventured the last chamberlain, "that he comes regarding the murder at the Ritz hotel, in which your majesty was graciously pleased to be interested."

"Yes, yes—my dear Count Frederick, it was absurd that you should be mixed in that—or the young American—I have not had time to think of it since then. What is all this now? Bring the man in."

And so presently the prefect, abashed and much perturbed, was admitted.

"Well, well," demanded the monarch, "what is it—why do you come here?"

"For only one reason, your majesty," began the prefect humbly. "We are convinced that there is more than chance medley in this murder. The thing goes deeper than we thought at first."

"Have you no suspect?"

"One, your majesty, a person of no importance, by name Roleau."

"How now, count?" Michael turned to the nobleman who still stood near. "What think you of this matter?"

"Count Frederick considered for a moment before he replied.

"Set him free," said he at length. "Watch him. He will lead us to something perhaps. Be sure that once he is loose he will not be at rest for long."

"An excellent idea," said Michael.

Michael turned now to the matters closer to his heart—the welfare of the young American, whom he had not seen since his return to the palace. Even now she waited for admission to his presence, and he had her summoned at once.

"What! mademoiselle," cried Michael, "you are pale. You have not yet fully recovered—you have been ill?"

"Yes, your majesty," replied Kitty, smiling somewhat wanly. He now noticed that the serving woman at her side carried her wraps, and that she herself appeared ready for the street.

"What! you mean to leave us?" exclaimed he. "What does this mean?"

"Your majesty," said Kitty, "graciously allow me my absence for the time. I must return to my hotel."

It was with deep relief that finally Kitty found herself once more freed of the royal presence and the royal palace. She sped, fast as might be, back to her hotel.

Count Frederick excused himself but a moment later. To the king he announced his intention of returning to his own home. Instead, he made his way also to the Ritz hotel.

The clerk at the hotel was more deferential to the nobleman than he had been to the nobleman's servant a trifle earlier.

"Her excellency, the young American? But now she came—she may be in her room—we shall see. Shall she join you in the parlors, Monsieur le Comte?"

"In the parlors on the floor above," replied Count Frederick, rather vaguely, and passed up the broad stair. But he had certain plans of his own which did not include a public audience with the young American. Instead, he passed boldly down the hall. Before the door at which he would have announced himself he paused. He could not well escape detection if he turned back, for the voices of others came to him down the hall. And in the room beyond the door he heard another voice—apparently she was using the telephone. Yes, it was she. He waited for an instant, and found himself without intention in possession of what she said.

Kitty at the time, in fact, was telephoning to the headquarters of police asking for knowledge of her servant Roleau. Her voice went on now rapid, staccato.

"Monsieur, he was freed, Roleau—yes, yes—what then? On probation?—yes, I know. He was here—he was followed to the hotel—he was followed to the rendezvous of the apaches—yes, yes—by whom?—why? He is there now, perhaps?—Ah, bah! what manner of officers are you? What is your plan in all this—to have him killed by thieves in turn?"

It Was the Torture Chamber—the Room of Terrors!

Count Frederick paused to hear no more, but flushed guiltily over his eavesdropping retraced his steps down the hall and sought more decorous means of meeting the young woman whom he wished to see. But even as he did so he reflected that from the detached exclamations he had heard surely she was planning yet other adventures. If Roleau had been here—if he had been followed away by the police toward the thieves' headquarters—surely this undaunted girl would in turn do what she could to rescue him. If so, once more she herself would need assistance.

Count Frederick stepped to one side in the hotel lobby and bided his time. It was as he thought. Before long Kitty hastened through the lobby and out toward the street. Evidently she had paused to make no more than slight changes in her toilet. Beyond question the purpose in her mind was to find Roleau.

Count Frederick strolled toward the desk and nodded pleasantly to the questioning clerk. "Yes," said he. "I was so fortunate—"

He did not pause to say definitely in what way he had been fortunate, but, unhurried, strolled down the steps into the street, intent on nothing so much as upon discovering what Kitty Gray next would do.

It was now a curious train that of those persons engaged in the search for the musterious coin. Roleau had indeed found an occupant in the room of his mistress when he hastened thither the moment he was released from csutody. That occupant, however, was not his mistress, but another—none less than a member of the apache band who had held her apartments under espionage. Roleau, hiding himself, waited for the appearance of the intruder—followed him out from the hall into the street. This had been but the moment before Kitty's return. The prefect had ordered Roleau's discharge by telephone from the palace, almost as she was leaving, and both she and Roleau had hastened to the hotel.

Now, as Kitty emerged, followed by Count Frederick, yet another one of Blake's underworld band stepped out from his hiding place and followed Count Frederick himself. And all of these, each was in pursuit of the coveted Gretzhoffen coin.

As for Roleau, his man made rapid progress, and it was not long before he had trailed him to the rendezvous of the band which he himself previously had learned. Undaunted, he would have pursued the fugitive to the inner chamber of the rendezvous had not he heard a sound which caused him to pause.

It was at this time that Blake, leader of the band of thieves, chanced to return to the rendezvous. He had passed part way into the subterranean passage when he looked on ahead just in time to see one of his men emerge from the central room and make a spring at an intruder whom he himself at once recognized as the man who at this very scene earlier had given him so desperate a battle—who later had given him into the hands of the law.

Thinking only of revenge now, forgetting the coin, the renegade leader whipped out his revolver and fired point blank at Roleau.

MONDAY—Part Twelve of "The Broken Coin" in two reels—"A Cry in the Dark." Thrilling scenes in this episode were taken in the bull ring at Quarez, Mexico. Roleaux displays his wonderful strength in a real bull fight. A Universal. Magnificient serial by Emercon Hough, scenario by Grace Cunard.

TUESDAY—"Hypocrites" presented by Bosworth, one of the greatest actors of the world, the establisher of Paramount pictures and now with the Universal Film company. Bosworth, Lois Weber, wife of Phillips Smalley, and Smalley himself, have astonished the entire world with their productions. "Hypocrites" was one of the first and best ones. Then they were with the Paramount. Now all three are with the Universal. They have produced "Scandal," a Broadway Universal feature. Also "Jewel," which wil be shown at the Olympic theatre Thursday, Sept. 30. The most wonderful picture that ever appeared on any screen . Bosworth's next picture which will be shown at the Olympic will be Thursday, Oct. 17, entitled "Little Brother of the Rich," This is another wonderful picture, equal to ' 'Hypocrites" and "Jewel." We are pleased to say that from now on the Universal Broadway features are without exception above any criticisms. They are far superior to the first Broadway Universal features. "Hypocrites" and "Jewel" are great sermons. Clergymen of our town and surrounding towns will be benefitted from these great moral uplifting productions. School teachers must advise their pupils to take advantage of these great lessons of life. Let us hope so.

WEEKS' SPECIAL EXTRAORDINARY FEATURES

Gun," with Barrymore, White, Hale and the Mysterious Mr. X. One of "The Romance of Elaine" chapters. Useless to say anything about this picture, at least to thousands of people who know more about it than we do. It is fine, with no fault in it.

THURSDAY—The day of "Jewell" in five charming parts, featuring the sweetest little actress of America, Ella Hall and Robert Julian, produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley from the famous novel "Jewell" by Clara Louise Burman. No ordinary film review can possibly convey the wonderful power of this idyllic play. The most hardened film critic unblushingly lets go to the extent that his frequent smiles are seen through tears.

FRIDAY—B. A. Rolfe photo play Co.'s production for the Metro Film Co., of "Fighting Bob," with Orrin Johnson on the leading role, in five acts of thrilling dramatic action. In both love and war, Bob displays great energy, perseverance and ability, and he is acclaimed president of the Republic and wins the girl for his wife.

SATURDAY—Chapter 19 of "The Diamond From the Sky" with $10,000 offered for the best suggestion. It is known and famed the world over. Many people do not sleep on Friday night for fear they might over sleep and miss our Saturday show. The manager of the Olympic is one of them.

"Our Lord's Return—Will He Come Again? What Will He Do When He Comes?" This will be the subject of an address by Pastor J. Hutchinson of Pittsburgh next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock in Kelly's hall, 524 Donner avenue.

That our Lord intended his disciples to understand that for some purpose, in some manner, and at some time He would come again, is generally admitted and believed by all familiar with the Scriptures But opinions differ greatly as to why and how and when He "will come again."

Mr. Hutchinson, a thorough Bible student, has made "The Manner of the Lord's Coming," a subject of special study; his thorough knowledge of the Scriptures and his absolute loyalty to them, coupled with intense earnestness, make his lectures extremely interesting.

The lecture is under the auspices of the Associated Bible students. No collection. Seats free. All welcome. 1t fp
